A Terribie Accident

The terrible accident resulting in the death of Chief Engineer Alies, of the Maine Central Rathroad, Saturday, was a severe shock to his many friends all over the State. The details of the accident were given in the telegraphic columns of THE WHIC Monday morning. Mr. Allen was well known in this city, having graduated from the Muine State College. He was a most competent official and enloyed the confidence and respect of his superiors and subordinates connected with the company. Manager Tucker was prostrated when the news of Mr. Allen's fearful death reached him, but with his usual energy immediately made every possible arrangement for the re-covery of the body. At this writing, however, the offorts had not been succassful. The sympathy of the people of the entire State will go out to the venerable parents of Mr. Allen upon whom the blow will fall with crashing effect.

His service in the Senate has been remarkable for one leading characteristic—the power, or the accidental fortune, to create a public impression as to his career precisely the reverse of its actual history. The illustrations are many.
